Danielle Bergen said her dreams became reality over the weekend.

The 19-year-old from Drake, Sask., placed second Saturday night in the women's division at the Red Bull Crashed Ice World Championship 2013, held in Niagara Falls, Ont.

She said although she was nervous going into the race, she felt "stellar" about her performance.

"Placing second was pretty much a dream come true," said Bergen, who also said it was a thrill to be one of the athletes representing Saskatchewan at this year's event.

"To represent Saskatchewan, competing against world athletes, it's a pretty awesome feeling," she said. "People were texting me ... and telling me congrats and stuff like that. And to know that I have that support from people back in Saskatchewan and back home — it makes it all the more fun and all the more worthwhile."

When asked about the dangers involved in the sport, she noted she doesn't feel that at risk while wearing full hockey equipment, but noted they do exist.

"During the race I definitely try and block that out," said Bergen. "During practice, always when you step on a new track I know that's one thing I keep in mind. But during the race it's definitely something that, when it pops into my mind, I definitely try to shove it down and focus on, 'Get to the finish line, get to the finish line.'"

Bergen will be travelling to Quebec City to compete in another Red Bull Crashed Ice event in March 2013.

Help! This is not an emergency: Info services coming to province

Database, website.
211 non-emergency phone number expected for 2014

MORGAN MODJESKI
morgan.modjeski@metronews.ca

Ken Howland, left, volunteer chair of the Saskatchewan 211 steering committee, and Sheri Benson, executive director with the United Way of Saskatoon, say a new 211 database and website expected for 2013 will serve as a road map for those in need. The database and website are crucial to the development of a provincewide 211 non-emergency number expected in 2014. MORGAN MODJESKI/METRO

Saskatchewan residents seeking social-service assistance may have an easier time in 2013 as the United Way in Regina and Saskatoon will be rolling out the first part of its 211 service next year.

211 is a non-emergency number people can call if they need information on issues like housing or access to food banks. In June of 2013, the United Way says, they estimate to have information for 10,000 up-to-date services available through a new online 211 database and public-access website.

Sheri Benson, executive director with United Way Saskatoon, says the database and website are major parts of creating a 211 number for the province — something they hope to have in place by 2014 — as they're still seeking a funding commitment from the province and through other avenues of funding.

"What we saw happening is that people were just calling any number," said Benson. "We talked to the police and we talked to SaskTel — and both of them said people call there for information referral because they don't know where else to go."

She continued, "911 is an easy-to-remember number, but it's not always the appropriate number."

Duane McKay, commissioner of emergency management and fire safety with the province, said even though 211 is in early stages of development, he sees its value.

"It's a little early to tell what kind of impact 211 will have, specific to the province of Saskatchewan," said McKay. "The concept though does have some merit in terms of what do we do with individuals who call 911 or other emergency lines (for what) are not really emergency calls.

"Right now, we really can't help them because we don't have that transfer capability into other agencies."

211 in Saskatchewan would cost roughly $1 million annually.

Personal touch

"Being able to talk to a person is key for a lot of people who ... in crisis, just want an answer and want it quickly."

Saskatchewan boom

Growing province, growing needs

Joanne Grant, CEO of the Regina United Way, explained as the province continues to grow, so does the demand for services.

"We talk about being in an economic boom, which is great and we see the signs of that, but there's also a downside ... as more people are pushed down into more vulnerable situations," said Grant.

She also said as the province continues to grow, people who are new to Canada need specific types of services.

"It really helps address the growing pains of a boom and as we grow rapidly, we need to be able to keep up with what's happening in our province." METRO

Articulate Ink has printed out a niche for itself in the artisan printmaking business in Regina. The collective, founded by four University of Regina grads in April 2011, prints a variety of products from T-shirts to posters and holiday cards.

"People kind of have an affinity for the way we do things — the sort of analog way," said Michelle Brownridge, 27, a director at Articulate Ink. "So many things in our world are digital and instant that it's kind of nice to interact with a product that has some tactility and authenticity to it."

The group uses often forgotten methods to produce their products, like letterpresses and all sorts of other complex machinery. But what really makes Articulate Ink standout is the process.

"We made it a priority that our studio operate in a green way," said Brownridge. "Often in the past and often still today there are a lot of dangerous chemicals involved in print making.

"But we make a point of cleaning up with plain-old vegetable oil and vinegar, so it's really non-toxic but provides the same function as using solvents," she continued.

Working out of the Creative City Centre in downtown Regina has been fruitful for the company, so much so that they are looking to expand.

"We quickly outgrew the space that we are in, we noticed that when we did workshops," said Brownridge. "There is a growing demand, so we would really like to be able to accommodate that in a larger space."

Egypt's top judges strike over courthouse blockade

Power play. Morsi supporters rally to stop judges from ruling on constitutional bias

Egypt's top court suspended its work indefinitely to protest "psychological and physical pressures" after supporters of the Islamist president prevented judges from entering the courthouse Sunday to rule on the legitimacy of a disputed constitutional assembly.

The decision by the Supreme Constitutional Court (SCC) is the latest twist in a worsening political crisis pitting President Mohammed Morsi and his allies against the mostly secular opposition and the powerful judiciary. The standoff began when Morsi issued decrees on Nov. 22 that gave him sweeping powers and granted the president — and the constitutional committee — immunity from the courts.

The Islamist-dominated panel drafting the new constitution then raced in a marathon session last week to vote on the charter's 236 clauses without the participation of liberal and Christian members. The fast-track hearing preempted a decision expected from the SCC on whether to dissolve the committee. The judges on Sunday postponed their ruling on that case.

A day earlier, Morsi announced a referendum on the draft charter on Dec. 15 despite opposition protests and questions about the document's legitimacy.

The president's seizure of vast powers has galvanized Egypt's disparate opposition groups, who have united in their demands that Morsi rescind the decrees and create a constituent assembly that is more balanced and inclusive.

Supporters of Morsi, who hails from the Islamic fundamentalist Muslim Brotherhood, claim that the court's judges are loyalists of ousted president Hosni Mubarak, who appointed them. Morsi's backers accuse the judges of trying to derail Egypt's transition to democratic rule.

Israel to withhold tax transfer to Palestinians

Israel on Sunday roundly rejected the United Nations' endorsement of an independent state of Palestine, announcing it would withhold more than $100 million collected for the Palestinian government to pay debts to Israeli companies.

It was the second act of reprisal since the UN General Assembly voted on Thursday to support Palestinian statehood. The following day, Israel announced plans to build thousands of settlement homes, including the first-ever developments on a sensitive piece of land near Jerusalem.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu declared the campaign, led by Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas, "a gross violation of the agreements signed with ... Israel."

Abbas returned Sunday to a hero's welcome in the West Bank city of Ramallah. Some 5,000 people thronged a square outside his headquarters.

"We now have a state," he said. "The world has said loudly, 'Yes to the state of Palestine.'"

Abbas warned of "creative punishments" by Israel. Referring to the latest settlement plans, he said, "We have to realize that your victory has provoked the powers of war, occupation and settlements."

The UN resolution endorsed the Palestinian position that its state includes the West Bank, east Jerusalem and Gaza Strip, territories captured by Israel.

In response, Finance Minister Yuval Steinitz said the government would withhold taxes and customs collected from Palestinian labourers and businesses on behalf of Abbas's Palestinian Authority.

The money will be used to help pay off the authority's debts to Israel, government officials said. This month, more than $100 million was to have been transferred. Steinitz said Israel would decide later whether to withhold future transfers.

Israel announced Friday that it would press ahead plans to build 3,000 housing units in the West Bank and east Jerusalem, the core of the Palestinians' hoped-for state.

It also vowed to dust off a master plan to build apartments and hotels on the section of territory east of Jerusalem. Palestinians have warned such construction would doom the creation of a viable state of Palestine.

Intelligence. Navy struggles to explain lost and found sensitive data

Electronic records detailing the planned overhaul of Canadian naval intelligence — created when admitted Russian spy Jeffrey Delisle was at the height of his treachery — were deleted from a National Defence database.

Two PowerPoint presentations, aimed at explaining the overhaul to intelligence analysts, were reported deleted when copies were requested earlier this year by The Canadian Press.

Military officials described the deletions as a clerical error.

The navy later claimed some copies had survived in email accounts.

Questions about the deletion come at a time when the military's entire handling of sensitive data is under scrutiny.

"We should be asking questions, absolutely," said retired colonel and military law expert Michel Drapeau.

Death sentence for Canadian resident suspended: Lawyer

A lawyer for Canadian resident Saeed Malekpour said that the computer programmer's death sentence on charges of creating a network of porn websites has been suspended in Iran.

Amnesty International and several activists have expressed caution, reserving judgement for proof of the suspension. Iran has in the past reversed decisions for clemency.

Malekpour has maintained that a software program he created while in Canada was used without his knowledge to post pornography. But he was nevertheless allegedly tortured for a confession and charged with "insulting and desecrating Islam."

After a 2010 trial widely condemned as unfair — and in which he was forbidden to defend himself — he was condemned to death.

Storm number 3 slams region over the weekend

Another major storm moving into Northern California brought more pouring rain, flooding and additional problems to an area already soaked after two major storms.

Residents of Northern California enjoyed just a bit of a respite, but the most recent storm — the third in a string of powerful weather systems to hit the region since Wednesday — arrived Saturday night and forced several rivers over their banks, as National Weather Service forecasters predicted.

With rivers and streams already running high and the ground saturated from the previous storms, the National Weather Service had issued flood warnings for both the Napa and Russian rivers north of San Francisco.

Worldwide pollution levels on the rise

Global warming.
Scientists say CO_2 increase means it's unlikely that countries will meet reduction targets

The amount of heat-trapping pollution the world spewed rose again last year by three per cent. Scientists say it's now unlikely that global warming can be limited to a couple of degrees, which is an international goal.

The overwhelming majority of the increase was from China, the world's biggest carbon dioxide polluter. Of the planet's top 10 polluters, the United States and Germany were the only countries that reduced their carbon dioxide emissions.

Last year, all the world's nations combined pumped nearly 38.2 billion tons of carbon dioxide into the air from the burning of fossil fuels such as coal and oil, according to new international calculations on global emissions published Sunday in the journal Nature Climate Change. That's about a billion tons more than the previous year.

The total amounts to more than 1.1 million kilograms of carbon dioxide released into the air every second.

Because emissions of the key greenhouse gas have been rising steadily and most carbon stays in the air for a century, it is not just unlikely but "rather optimistic" to think that the world can limit future temperature increases to two degrees Celsius, said the study's lead author, Glen Peters at the Center for International Climate and Environmental Research in Oslo, Norway.

Three years ago, nearly 200 nations set the two-degrees temperature goal in a non-binding agreement.

Negotiators, now at a conference underway in Doha, Qatar, are trying to find ways to reach that target.

The only way, Peters said, is to start reducing world emissions now and "throw everything we have at the problem."

Andrew Weaver, a climate scientist at the University of Victoria in Canada who was not part of the study, said: "We are losing control of our ability to get a handle on the global-warming problem."

Conference in Doha

Looking beyond Kyoto

Highlighting a rift between the rich countries and emerging economies like China, New Zealand's climate minister staunchly defended his government's decision to drop out of the emissions pact for developed nations, saying it's an outdated and insufficient response to global warming.

Other key issues at the conference, now starting its second week, include how to help emerging nations switch to climate-friendly energy sources and charting the course for a new treaty that would replace the Kyoto Protocol, which covers only developed countries.

New Zealand backed out of the pact's second phase last week. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

2011's biggest polluters

1. China, up 10 per cent to 10 billion tons
2. United States, down two per cent to 5.9 billion tons
3. India, up seven per cent to 2.5 billion tons
4. Russia, up three per cent to 1.8 billion tons
5. Japan, up 0.4 per cent to 1.3 billion tons

The list continues with Germany, Iran and South Korea, followed by:

9. Canada, up two per cent to 0.6 billion tons.

The list is rounded out with South Africa at 10.

China now tops U.S. as world's trade partner

The hand that feeds. China is starting to push back in disputes over trade, exchange rates and climate change

Shin Cheol-soo no longer sees his future in the United States.

The South Korean businessman supplied components to American automakers for a decade. But this year, he uprooted his family from Detroit and moved home to focus on selling to the new economic superpower: China.

In just five years, China has surpassed the U.S. as a trading partner for much of the world, including U.S. allies such as South Korea and Australia, according to an Associated Press analysis of trade data. As recently as 2006, the U.S. was the larger trading partner for 127 countries, versus just 70 for China. By last year the two had clearly traded places: 124 countries for China, 76 for the U.S.

In the most abrupt global shift of its kind since the Second World War, the trend is changing the way people live and do business from Africa to Arizona, as farmers plant more soybeans to sell to China and students sign up to learn Mandarin.

Power-holder

"The United States is a tiger with no power."

Shin Cheol-soo, South Korean businessman

The findings show how fast China has ascended to challenge America's century-old status as the globe's dominant trader, a change that is gradually translating into political influence. They highlight how pervasive China's impact has been, spreading from neighbouring Asia to Africa and now emerging in Latin America, the traditional U.S. backyard.

Despite China's now-slowing economy, its share of world output and trade is expected to keep rising, with growth forecast at up to eight per cent a year over the next decade.

Last year, Shin's Ena Industry Co. made half his sales of rubber and plastic parts to U.S. factories. But his plans call for China, which overtook the U.S. as the biggest auto market in 2009, to rise fivefold to 30 per cent of his total by 2015.

"The United States is a tiger with no power," Shin said in his office, where three walls are lined with books, many about China. "Nobody can deny that China is the one now rising."

China approves Wanxiang bid to buy U.S.'s A123

China has approved a proposal by auto-parts conglomerate Wanxiang Group Corp. to purchase the assets of bankrupt U.S. battery maker A123 Systems.

The Chinese Commerce Ministry's approval of the bid was announced by the official Xinhua News Agency on Sunday.

Wanxiang is interested in buying substantially all of the assets of A123, which is based in Massachusetts.

It will have to compete with other bidders, including Johnson Controls Inc., a U.S. auto-parts maker in Milwaukee, which has offered $125 million for A123's automotive assets.

A123 has received more than $130 million in Department of Energy grants. A court hearing to consider approving the asset sale is set for Dec. 11.

LIP FUR IS GONE — BUT IMPACT IS JUST STARTING TO GROW

URBAN COMPASS

Where did Movember come from?

There I was, minding my own business when, overnight, moustaches happened.

Not that I object. It's good, furry fun for gentlemen across the world to get in touch with their inner Magnum PI and grow a 'stache to raise money for prostate cancer and men's mental health during the least mentally healthy month in the year.

Really, before moustaches moved in, there wasn't much nice to say about November, especially this November and its blast of early winter. But this year, we've been treated to the epic attempt from Premier Brad Wall to grow a more luxuriant moustache than P.E.I. Premier Robert Ghiz.

As I write, Movember is just over and the two premiers have each raised more than $15,000 for the cause, but their moustache-growing prowess isn't even close. Ghiz was almost able to achieve handlebar proportions while poor Wall was more than a bit follicle-y challenged.

The razors are out and today, Movember is little more than a scratchy memory for the first spouses of Saskatchewan and P.E.I. Until next Movember.

It won't come as a great surprise to learn that Movember had its murky beginnings in an Australian pub circa 1999 — it sounds like the sort of thing that springs to life after several pints — but it has recently grown into an international movement, raising $175 million by "changing the face of men's health."

A good thing, too, because for too long, prostate cancer has been hiding in the shadows, even though it's the No. 1 cancer killer of men — 4,000 in Canada each year, according to the Canadian Cancer Society. It's also the most common form of cancer — 27 per cent of new cancer cases each year are prostate cancers. Fortunately, the five-year survival rate is good — 96 per cent — but there's nothing pretty about prostate cancer.

Just as there's nothing pretty about those Movember moustaches. Wall's, for example, looks like he was reading the paper when his nose started to itch. But it's the thought that counts, and raising money to fight cancer is a great thought to have.

Full disclosure time: I have a year-round upper-lip facial hair feature that goes with the rest of a goatee. It's compensation for a marked deficiency up top. But it gives me the option of expressing solidarity with all the momentary mustaches of Movember.

So it's all good. Unless you're my wife and every month is Movember. By the time Mo-gust rolls around, she has a tendency to get tired of making the scratchy sacrifice for men's health. I can sympathize, but it's a mo-ble cause, isn't it?

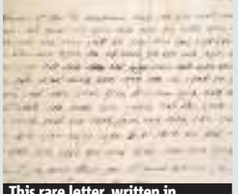
Blowing up the Kremlin

Secret-code letter by Napoleon auctioned off

A secret-code letter sent in 1812 by Napoleon Bonaparte boasting that his French forces would blow up Moscow's Kremlin has sold at auction for 10 times its estimated pre-sale price.

A Paris museum — the Museum of Letters and Manuscripts — was finalizing its purchase of the Oct. 20, 1812, document for $243,500 US, including fees. That's far above the pre-sale estimate of $19,500 US.

Auctioneers at Fontainebleau Auction House south of Paris say the letter sold Sunday is unique. It was written in a numeric code used by the French ruler to throw off would-be interceptors. Its content bared the strains on Napoleon of his calamitous Russian invasion.



This rare letter, written in unusually emotive language, sees Napoleon complain of harsh conditions and the shortcomings of his grand army.

- Frost also affixed a two-headed Dewey (of Duck Tales fame) to an abandoned Kentucky Fried Chicken, and a somewhat disturbing version of Bambi to a former Home Depot location.
- The KFC duck clearly invokes urban legends about the company using genetically modified animals in its food, while the Home Depot piece is a comment on mass-produced goods.

Frost uses his art as a form of social commentary.

"In a lot of ways, it's about using corporate imagery as a way to take the power back, taking their logos and what they're feeding us, and subverting it," he says.

Frost's pieces are paper posters affixed using simple adhesives. The method helps minimize his chance of a run-in with the law.

"Because it's paper, you can only get in trouble for littering," he says. METRO

Palliative care fundraiser a knockout

News Worth Sharing

Media will always have to report on the tough stuff. But we know that Canada is full of compassionate individuals, inspiring projects and stories worth celebrating.

These fighters truly have a serious cause on the ropes!

On Nov. 29, nine women stepped into the boxing ring to make an impact for an issue they care about.

Held at the Lonsdale Boxing Club, Kiss the Canvas was their fundraiser for Regina Palliative Care Inc., an organization that provides comfort and guidance to thousands of families as their loved ones face the final stage of life.

Taking on nicknames like Amanda "Crazy Legs" Quayle, Mary "Mad Dog" Bermudez, Heather "Hurricane" Greenman and Loretta "Hammerhead" Hughes, among others, these champions not only trained for three months to ready themselves for the challenge, they also set a goal of raising $5,000 each.

"Kiss the Canvas is a gentle link to palliative care," said Bill Pratt, executive director of Regina Palliative Care Inc.

"When a person reaches the end of their life journey, it can be tough, gruelling and hard — much like boxing. However, throughout the entire journey there is gentleness and compassion provided through palliative care."

The money raised will be used to provide training to the organization's staff and volunteers, to purchase essential equipment and to support the Greystone Bereavement Centre, which offers professional counselling for those coping with loss.

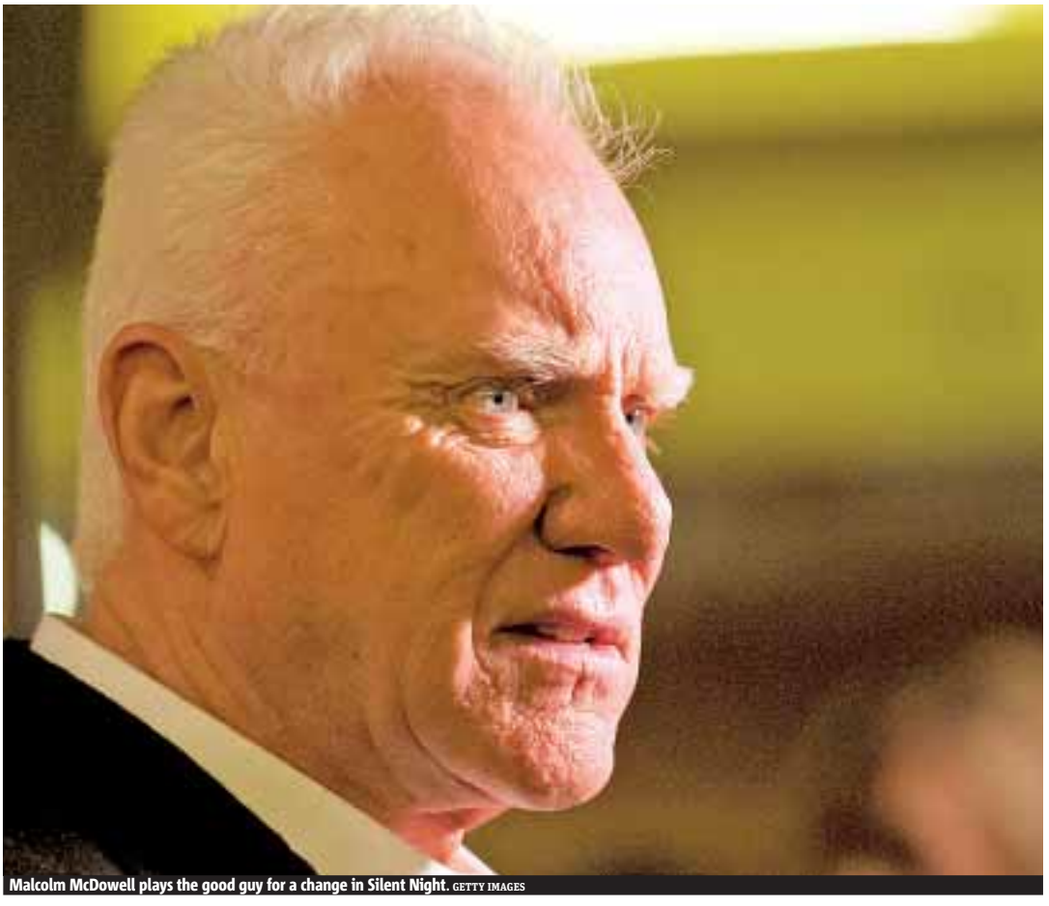
Silent Night. Latest role offers McDowell — who relished beating Stanley Kubrick at table tennis — a rare chance to play the good guy

RICHARD CROUSE
Scene@metronews.ca



Malcolm McDowell plays the good guy for a change in Silent Night. GETTY IMAGES

On Wednesday, the two most popular items on my Facebook site were a picture of a kimono-wearing David Bowie playing ping-pong, the other a mention of my upcoming interview with Malcolm McDowell.

My reference to McDowell, the menacing actor who famously played the man who killed Captain Kirk in Star Trek: Generations and became an icon starring as Alex DeLarge in A Clockwork Orange, drew dozens of comments.

The interview was meant to promote Silent Night, a Winnipeg-shot slasher flick about a killer Santa Claus, on DVD next week, but before we get into talking about the film, however, I tell him about the postings. He connects the dots between table tennis and his most famous film.

It seems director Stanley Kubrick and McDowell played ping-pong on the set of A Clockwork Orange. When I ask who usually won, he said:

"He never ever took a set from me. I wiped the floor with him with such great relish because it was the only thing I could really beat him at. He was tormenting me as the character and I'm sure deep down he enjoyed it. He was a little bit sadistic. I went through quite a lot of nasty injuries from the eye thing and horrible things like being dunked in water and almost drowned. There was a lot of physical abuse. So when I could get my own back, I really loved it."

When I ask if he still plays the game, he replies, "No, I haven't played in years."

Hasn't had time I guess.

An on-going role in the series Franklin and Bush and 17 other IMDB credits for 2012 alone are proof that at age 69, he keeps as busy as most actors half his age. He says Silent Night was a welcome change, however.

Usually cast as a baddie, he was chuffed to play the brave sheriff of a town terrorized by a slaying Santa. "Without pandering to the audience, I just wanted to bring a little lightness and humour to it without chewing the scenery," he says. "Well, not too much."

Not that he's unhappy playing villains. "In my early career, I started playing heavies," he says. "Clockwork Orange is one of the great heavies. If I had been playing heroic types I would have had a very short career. Playing heavies has allowed me to work no matter what my age."

A biting affair: Pattinson keeps Stewart on her toes

Kristen Stewart and Robert Pattinson may have reconciled following her cheating scandal this summer, but it's not necessarily all smooth sailing between the Twilight co-stars.

"Things will be strained for a while," a source tells Us Weekly. "Rob is at a point where he sometimes ignores her. He'll go out and won't respond to her calls or texts right away. She knows she has to go along with it. She is working hard at the relationship."

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

Ke$ha wouldn't rule out romance with the Biebs

While Justin Bieber appears to be patching things up with Selena Gomez, he can take comfort in the fact that he'd have other options if the reconciliation doesn't work out. When asked by Rolling Stone if she'd be interested in getting intimate with the 18-year-old pop star, rapper Ke$ha gives a resounding, "Sure" before asking, "Wait, is he even legal? Could I go to jail for this?" Once assured that Bieber is in fact of age, Ke$ha adds, "OK then, I would. We could go out and buy lottery tickets, vote, play putt-putt golf. All the things that are legal at the age of 18."

Biel loves calling Timberlake her hubby

Jessica Biel is adjusting to married life, as weird as it may seem to her just over a month after tying the knot with Justin Timberlake.

"It's weird because it feels like almost nothing has changed, yet something that you can't really describe — or something that isn't tangible — has changed," she tells Ellen DeGeneres in an interview.

"I think the weirdest and kind of most wonderful thing is that word, 'That's my husband.' That's the word. And every time I say it, I go really Southern with it. It's weird."

Custody agreement final for Berry and ex Aubry

After a lengthy custody battle that came to a head with a bloody Thanksgiving brawl between Gabriel Aubry and Olivier Martinez, Halle Berry and ex-boyfriend Aubry have reportedly reached a custody agreement over their four-year-old daughter Nahla — though details are hard to come by. "The parties have reached an amicable agreement. There will be no further statements regarding this matter," Berry's lawyer said in a statement to People magazine.

Little swimmers

Beyond sleeping soundly, new research suggests kids who swim also hit developmental milestones earlier than their landlocked peers.

The Griffith Institute for Educational Research pooled together three years' worth of data from 7,000 under-fives from Australia, New Zealand and the U.S. in the most comprehensive study on the impact of early years swimming.

Swimmers outperformed non-swimmers, regardless of socio-economic background and gender. Not only were visual-motor skills milestones achieved earlier, but children who swam also scored better in areas of literacy and numeracy. JULIE M. GREEN, YUMMYMUMMYCLUB.CA

Easy linen closet solutions

Have you ever found yourself pulling apart your entire linen closet in a desperate search for matching sheets and pillowcases?

Well, there's a super simple solution that I wish I would have thought of years ago!

When you are putting your sheets away, fold and place them inside the matching pillowcase. That way, everything is in one pillowcase — perfectly neat and folded.

Bonus: No one will notice how well (or not well) your fitted sheets are folded.

Bullying. The increasing problem hits close to home for one family

CONSUELO BERNARDI
yummymummyclub.ca

It's 2:03 a.m. and I'm wide-awake. My mind keeps replaying a conversation my husband and I had with our six-year-old son, who told us he was being bullied at school.

It was the hardest, most gut-wrenching conversation I've ever had. My son was a happy, optimistic kid who recently had turned into an angry, moody and argumentative shell of himself. For the longest time, I blamed myself for going back to work. I wish my job was the reason behind the change.

He was afraid of recess. He didn't want to be pushed or called an idiot and a baby.

The worst part was that he was starting to believe these words. He said, "I know you keep saying that they are just words and I should ignore them, but sometimes the words are just too strong and my brain tells me to believe them. Maybe I am the world's worst boy and I don't deserve to be at that school or in this family. Or maybe I shouldn't even be on this earth. Those boys are making my life shorter. I feel that in my head."

No six-year-old should ever say these words. No child should feel afraid to go to school — ever.

I now have a heightened sense of urgency to find a bullying solution. I get that kids will be kids, but this generation seems to be increasingly filled with kids who push and test the boundaries with no true sense of what consequences their actions will have.

Schools need the resources and support to deal with this ever-growing problem. Parents need to be more proactive.

We need to talk to our kids about being bullied, what bullying is and what it does. We need to keep the lines of communication open and keep the dialogue going until it sinks in.

Before he finally fell asleep, my son asked if we were mad at him for telling us what was bothering him. We both told him how incredibly proud of him we were because we knew how hard it was for him to tell us, especially since it had been bothering him for such a long time. We told him we thought he was very brave. He cried. We cried. We exchanged I love yous and extra long hugs.

Bullying proves that words can hurt. ISTOCK

I stayed with him until he fell asleep, just staring, watching him breathe and hoping that his mind would be filled with nothing but good dreams while he slept. And I wished that in the morning he would turn back into that happy, carefree little boy I once knew.

Bonding. Having little ones help in the kitchen creates memories

MOMSTOWN

You're covered in flour, the floor is a mess of coconut and chocolate chips, and your kids' fingers won't stay out of the mixing bowl.

It sounds like a disaster, right? Nope, it's a memory. It's a learning experience. It's a wonderful holiday tradition for you to create with your kids. It's a moment that's worth all of the cookie crumbs and vagrant coconut pieces.

Baking with your kids is really something they will remember forever.

Take the plunge, pull out your apron and remember these five tips to help your survive baking with the kids.

Make a plan
Get ahead of the mess and set up the ingredients along with bowls, measuring cups and the mixer. The more organized you are, the better.

Reason for the insanity
Make something to give to the teacher or neighbour in a cookie exchange. By planning it that way, you're less likely to bail on the plan and more likely to help your child develop pride in his or her work and giving.

Choose a creative project that's easy to adapt
A project or recipe that is too complex will be frustrating for both you and the kids. Small hands and short attention spans will do better with projects that have only a few simple steps.

Document!
Take loads of pictures of the whole process for the memory books (or social networking sites). If the cookies burn, you'll be bummed about having no treats, but you'll still be able to reflect on how much fun it was.

Eggnog never hurts
There's nothing wrong with mama chef enjoying a little spiked eggnog during the baking process. It helps turn a blind eye to the egg shells in the batter and the fingers in the bowl. We're all real moms, right?

A Tex-Mex fiesta in a bowl

The garnishes for this Tortilla, Sautéed Corn and Plum Tomato Soup make it a real Tex-Mex favourite as well as a beautiful-looking soup.

It's a great starter to a main course of fajitas, burritos or quesadillas.

I buy flavoured tortillas in bulk and freeze them.

To defrost, place the entire package in the microwave oven and heat on high for 30 seconds, or just until you can break away the number you need. Refreeze the remainder.

The different colours add interest to any meal.

This recipe serves six. LORELLA ZANETTI, FROM ROSE REISMAN'S COMPLETE LIGHT KITCHEN (WHITECAP BOOKS)

Ingredients

- 2 tsp vegetable oil
- 1 cup chopped onion
- 1/2 cup chopped green bell pepper
- 2 tsp minced fresh garlic
- 3/4 cup drained canned corn kernels
- 4 cups chicken or vegetable stock
- 3/4 cup rinsed and drained canned black beans
- 3 tbsp basmati rice
- 1 tsp hot chili paste
- 1 cup diced plum tomatoes
- 2 1/2 tsp cornstarch
- 1/4 tsp salt and freshly ground black pepper
- 1 cup thinly sliced flavored flour tortillas
- 1/3 cup chopped cilantro or parsley
- 1/4 cup low-fat sour cream

1. Spray a non-stick saucepan with cooking oil, add the vegetable oil and place over medium heat. Cook the onion, green pepper and garlic, stirring occasionally for 5 minutes or until the onions are golden. Stir in the corn and cook for 5 minutes, or until the corn begins to brown.

2. Stir in the stock, black beans, rice and chili paste. Bring to a boil, reduce the heat to a simmer and cook for 12 minutes.

3. Add the tomatoes, cornstarch (dissolved in 1 tbsp of water) and salt and pepper. Simmer for 2 minutes until slightly thickened.

4. Ladle the soup into individual bowls and garnish each serving with tortilla strips, fresh herbs, and sour cream.

Growing happy people with wholesome food!

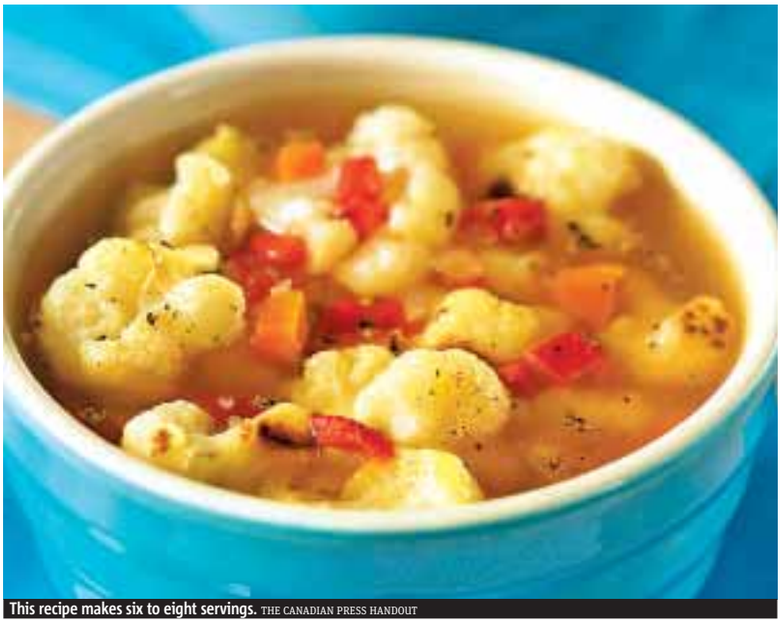
This Roasted Cauliflower and Red Pepper soup not only offers great flavour, but the colours and textures are attractive as well.

Roasting intensifies the flavours of the vegetables. To roast red peppers, quarter peppers and remove seeds. Place skin side up on a rimmed baking sheet in a 230 C (450 F) oven and roast for 10 minutes. Turn peppers over and roast for 10 to 15 minutes or until skins are blackened. Transfer peppers to a small bowl, cover tightly and let stand for about 15 minutes. When cool enough to handle, peel off blackened skin and discard.

Meanwhile, cut the cauliflower into bite-size florets to make it easier to eat.

Ingredients

- 1.25 l (5 cups) bite-size cauliflower florets
- 20 ml (4 tsp) canola oil, divided
- 250 ml (1 cup) finely chopped onion
- 250 ml (1 cup) finely chopped carrots
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 1 l (4 cups) reduced-sodium chicken broth
- 2 roasted red bell peppers, finely chopped
- 2 sprigs fresh thyme
- Freshly ground black pepper



This recipe makes six to eight servings. THE CANADIAN PRESS HANDOUT

1. Heat oven to 220 C (425 F).

2. Line a rimmed baking sheet with foil. Place cauliflower on sheet and drizzle with 10 ml (2 tsp) of the oil.

3. Roast, turning once, for 20 to 25 minutes or until florets start to caramelize and are lightly browned.

4. Meanwhile, in a large pot, heat remaining oil over medium heat. Sauté onion and carrots for 3 to 4 minutes or until softened. Add garlic and sauté for 30 seconds. Stir in caramelized cauliflower, broth, roasted peppers and thyme; increase heat to high and bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer for 10 minutes to blend flavours. Discard thyme sprigs. Season to taste with pepper. THE CANADIAN PRESS/ COOK! DIETITIANS OF CANADA (ROBERT ROSE INC., 2011).

Lawton's rink captures Canada Cup curling title

Curling. Saskatoon skip improves chances of qualifying for 2014 Winter Olympics with victory in Moose Jaw

Stefanie Lawton of Saskatoon captured the Capital One Canada Cup women's curling title Sunday to secure her spot in the 2013 Roar of the Rings.

Lawton won 6-4 over a Jennifer Jones team being skipped by Kaitlyn Lawes. Teaming up with Marliese Kasner, Sherri Singler and Sherry Anderson, Lawton scored one in the 10th end to clinch her third Canada Cup victory in front of 2,727 fans in Moose Jaw.

The men's and women's champions receive one of the six automatic qualification spots for the Roar of the Rings next December in Winnipeg — the tournament that will determine Canada's entries at the 2014 Winter Games in Sochi, Russia.

"It's huge," Lawton said on clinching her spot. "You count points all year — the last couple of years — to get that berth. We don't have to worry about counting points, and where you're ranking. ... For sure, that feels really good."

Lawes, meanwhile, is handling skip duties for Jones' Winnipeg rink since Jones gave birth to a baby girl two weeks ago and is also recovering from knee surgery.

Lawes' team includes Dawn Askin, Jill Officer and Kirsten Wall.

"It was an interesting year for us," said Lawes. "Definitely learned a lot and we had a wonderful time playing with Kirsten. It would have been nice to finish it off with her, but we're happy with our week at the Canada Cup. To make the final is really satisfying."

Chiefs find win amidst the grief

Kansas City Chiefs players kneel and pray before a game against the Carolina Panthers on Sunday in Kansas City, Mo. PETER AIKEN/GETTY IMAGES

Against the backdrop of an unthinkable tragedy, the Kansas City Chiefs gave themselves a reason to be proud Sunday — and perhaps the impetus to let the healing begin.

Brady Quinn threw for 201 yards and two touchdowns, and Jamaal Charles ran for 127 yards in the Chiefs' 27-21 victory over the Carolina Panthers. The win snapped an eight-game losing streak during one of the most difficult seasons the franchise has ever experienced.

The win came a day after linebacker Jovan Belcher allegedly shot his girlfriend multiple times, then drove to the team's practice facility and turned the gun on himself as GM Scott Pioli and coach Romeo Crennel looked on.

Pioli walked through the press box before the game and said he was doing "OK," though he didn't stop to talk. Crennel was on the sideline coaching his team to an uplifting victory.

Horoscopes

Aries
March 21 - April 20
If you jump to conclusions today you will most likely get it completely wrong, so be careful. That applies both to personal affairs and to your career. Remember: a quick decision is not always the best decision.

Taurus
April 21 - May 21
Think twice before deciding your next move, then think a third time to be on the safe side. With Jupiter strong in your chart you could make a lot of money – but you could just as easily lose it too.

Gemini
May 22 - June 21
It could turn out to be costly if you act on the advice of a colleague. Trust your own judgment and make your own decisions, even if it means going against "expert" opinion which, as you know, is not always reliable.

Cancer
June 22 - July 23
What is your weak spot? What area are you most vulnerable in? Make sure you know and make sure you are well protected because your rivals will seek to exploit it over the next 24 hours. Be on your guard.

Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
For some strange reason the words you are using don't sound the way you want them to sound. In which case your best bet is probably to say nothing at all, at least for the next 24 to 48 hours.

Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
With the Sun opposing Jupiter across important angles of your chart you will need to make a conscious effort not to go over the top. Whatever it is that is winding you up right now let it go.

Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Common sense should tell you that you don't have the time to do everything yourself, so get help from people who share your aims and ideals. They may never do as good a job as you, but what choice do you have?

Scorpio
Oct. 2 04 - Nov. 22
Stop thinking so hard and focus on tasks that are physical rather than intellectual. Not only will your mind get the rest it needs but the answer to an old problem will pop into your head when you least expect it.

Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
With Jupiter, your ruler, opposed by the Sun today you may fear the worst about a partnership issue, but there really is no need. Everything will work out for the best in the end. Somehow it always does.

Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Partners and colleagues are far too busy sorting out their own problems at the moment to worry much about yours. Which is annoying in one way but good in another. They are less likely to watch what you're up to!

Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Take what you hear from a friend with a large pinch of salt, because the planets warn they are exaggerating. If they tell you one thing and your sixth sense tells you the opposite you must trust your own inner voice.

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
It might be best not to make any sudden or far-reaching decisions, but if you have to make a choice of some kind make sure you consult family and friends.
